Bilingual Edge: Book Review - DinoLingo Help Center
The assumption of the cognitive edge of bilinguals is based mostly on the work of Ellen Bialystok (2001) who, along with other psycholinguists, has found that bilingual children demonstrate metalinguistic awareness (e.g., that a thing stays the same if you change its label) earlier than monolingual children or that bilingual children are more creative than monolingual children (e.g., as measured by how many ideas they have about what you could do with an empty water bottle).
